for energy engineering, the area has become less dependent on this sector as the catalyst for employment growth. With the emergence of the high-tech sector, continued growth in exports, NASA's efforts on the International Space Station, and the expansion of the internationally recognized Texas Medical Center, Houston's largest employers clearly confirm the economy's diversification. Houston's economy is more diverse than ever before.

Houston continues to see slow but steady growth, and has avoided the deceleration in job growth seen nationally and regionally since the beginning of the year. The metro area has far surpassed its previous employment peak. Industrial activity in the metro area continues to expand according to the regional NAPM index, although the pace of expansion has seen some moderation in the past six months. In addition, high oil prices are putting upward pressure on mining and rig activity in the metro area. Construction activity remains healthy, and house price growth is steady but moderate.

Further, several large scale expansions at and around the Port of Houston area, headlined by Wal-Mart's huge new distribution center, are set to invigorate the local economy. Houston is expected to grow to above average from 2005 with corporate and energy industries. Longer term, continued diversification of the metro area's industrial structure and still above average population growth will ensure healthy economic growth. Houston's performance is expected to rank in the top quintile over the forecast horizon. Houston's largest employers clearly confirm the economy's diversification away from energy dependence.

Large corporations such as Continental Airlines, Compaq Computer Corporation, Halliburton, Pizza Hut, Wal-Mart, Reliant Energy, SBC Southwestern Bell are among those making Houston their corporate base.

Executive Summary

Houston/The Woodlands Retail Market

Houston's retail market, which contains approximately 131.7 million square feet (msf), has experienced a robust past few years. Occupancy as of third quarter 2005 was 86.4 percent, while absorption totaled 682,083 square feet. Over the past four quarters, Houston retail has absorbed over 2,504,844 square feet. Regional centers and community centers have the highest average occupancies at 88.1 percent and 86.3 percent, respectively, while neighborhood centers provide the lowest at 85.8 percent. Negative factors previously impacting the market had been closing of many major national and regional stores, flat economic conditions, as well as high completion levels. However, healthy consumer spending, moderate construction levels, and reinvigorated economic and population growth has fueled recent retail space demand. New retail construction and absorption is particularly active in areas near strong residential growth and rapidly expanding master-planned communities in Harris, Fort Bend, and Montgomery counties.

The Woodlands Market Street, a 450,000 square foot retail center across from The Cynthia Woods Mitchell Pavilion, the widely acclaimed venue for concerts, has brought additional traffic and influence to the area. Market Street houses retailers and restaurants such as Ann Taylor, Anthropologie, Barnes & Noble, The Cheesecake Factory, Fleming's Prime Steakhouse, P.F. Chang's, Pottery Barn, Williams-Sonoma and many more.
